

Bridal Shower Invitations and Food and Wine

Weddings can be ridiculously expensive. Many couples get lost in the details of table decorations and menu planning and forget about the whole idea of gathering loved ones together to help them celebrate their nuptials. The materialistic trend of the uber wedding has even trickled down to bridal showers. Guests who receive bridal shower invitations often cringe at the thought of having to buy yet another gift for the same couple. Guests should look forward to a bridal shower, not feel a tug on their bank account.

In this day and age when couples are waiting longer to get married and are already established in their careers, there should be a trend in bridal showers toward more fun and less gifts. There are many ways to throw a bridal shower that get away from the traditional "buy a mixer and toast the pure bride" mold. So get your thinking cap on and start brainstorming for the sake of the people who will receive those bridal shower invitations. If you are having a difficult time getting started, I will give you some ideas.

Everyone loves wine and food. What guests would not want to receive bridal shower invitations to a hosted wine tasting soiree? Buy a selection of wines and have your guests help choose the wine that will be served at the wedding. Do the whole nine yards, by covering up labels and giving everyone comment cards. Another option is to have a "stock the wine cellar" party, in which everyone brings a bottle to stock your home collection. Have sharpie markers on hand, so guests can sign the bottles. You will smile whenever you get a new bottle out of the collection in later years, as you toast to the person who gave it to you.

Now onto a few food bridal shower themes. You can have everyone write up their favorite recipe on snazzy paper. Have a nice blank book at the party for everyone to mount their recipe in and have them add any comments on a page dedicated to that recipe. You will think of your loved ones and your shower for years to come as you make all the yummy recipes as a couple. Another idea makes your guests work a little harder, but is all in good fun. Each guest brings an hors d'oeuvre of their choice. Your guests vote on the best one via secret ballot (so no one will leave with hurt feelings). Feature the winning creation at the wedding reception and name it after your friend.

Let your guests receive those bridal shower invitations with a twitter of excitement, as they anticipate participating in something memorable and fun. There are so many themes for a bridal shower that let your guests offer something other than a purchased gift. Revel in the fact that you are hosting a fantastically fun party for the very people that will be toasting you and your partner.

About the Author

Similar articles about bridal shower invitations, click a great site.

Source: <http://tacomagarage.com>