Families with very young children should research Aiken SC dentists who specialize in family practice. Infants have been known to develop tooth decay from overexposure to milk and fruit juice even before their first teeth erupt, especially if put down for the night with a bottle of liquid other than plain water. Make that first appointment with an Aiken SC dentist around the time of your baby's first birthday to head off any problems that may already be developing.

And speaking of problems, you would be wise to choose an Aiken SC dentist who is committed to the pursuit of continuing professional education in the latest corrective and restorative techniques. The practice of dentistry is in constant flux, so it is well worth your time to locate an Aiken SC dentist devoted to giving you the most advanced care possible.

Good oral health depends on preventative care and patient education, especially in children. Does your Aiken SC dentist take the time to speak with you and your family about proper brushing and flossing techniques and advise which foods should be avoided to minimize tooth decay. It is never too early to learn. Your Aiken SC dentist should also schedule regular dental cleanings for you and your children to prevent plaque buildup.

What restorative services does your Aiken SC dentist perform. The most common procedures, of course, would be cavity fillings. Your dentist may also apply sealants to your teeth to prevent plaque and bacteria from building up in grooves too narrow for a toothbrush bristle to clean. Bonding with a composite resin material repairs damage from tooth decay, closes gaps between teeth and safely adjusts tooth alignment. Other, more advanced restorative services that your Aiken SC dentist may offer would include dentures and crown and bridge work to restore teeth that are damaged or missing, root canal treatment and tooth extraction. Your Aiken SC dentist should also offer dental sedation to patients who suffer from dental phobias.

A healthy smile is quite important to our self confidence so, therefore, your Aiken SC dentist should be your source for cosmetic corrections. The most popular cosmetic treatment, by far, is tooth whitening but veneers, otherwise referred to as bonding, are also used to restore that lost shine. And, of course, there are the old standbys braces and retainers that help to straighten and realign teeth. Related information Dentists aiken -
