

How has blogging changed the world of Journalism

Since the inception of Internet, the world has seen radical changes in the way we communicate and blogging is the prime example of such a change. Simply, blogging is the act of writing to reach mass audience by utilizing the Internet as a principal mode. People who write blogs are known as bloggers. Professional bloggers have created a niche in Journalism with its own medium of communication. Blogging is sub divided into many categories including personal blogs, corporate blogs and question blogs.

Video blogging is a relatively new concept which highlights the issues from video clips rather than the content in writing. It should be noted that blogging is synonymous with writing but it is in fact a much more informal style of writing. Blogging has gain wide spread acceptance around the world because it provides writers much more freedom than the typical press. Unlike, Journalism where most bloggers are restricted by particular guidelines, in blogging, the writer uses whatever style they prefer. The development of Internet has really provided bloggers a more liberal choice. It will not be an oversimplification to suggest that blogging has provided a new dimension to Journalism in a more refined manner. Just like the Internet, Blogging is emerging as the most liked medium. See these also Blog search -- Blogging --

About the Author

Find more information related to submit blogs, see us at Blogskinny.com.

Source: <http://tacomagarage.com>