

Blue Mountain Cards Are More Than A Success Story

Ecards need no introduction. The rage for electronic greeting cards began sometime in the early 90s and has only scaled greater heights ever since. The age of sending ecards is here to stay. Gone are the days when people would stand in a queue miles long to purchase a card for Valentines Day or some other equally special occasion. But when the electronic greeting cards became a craze, people assumed that this could hardly be a wise business idea. Giving away ecards was indeed a curious business model. For starters moving people from the traditional paper greeting cards space was a complicated task. People needed to appreciate the wisdom in adopting technology to perform something that was earlier manual.
